TPS and work authorization applications on behalf of 97 Afghan citizens.

Workshops, where 20 attorney, student, and community volunteers provided free legal representation and resources to Afghan refugees. The workshops focused on how to navigate the legal system in the United States, including agricultural exceptionalism (systematic exclusion of farmworkers from federal labor protections), and the impacts of climate change on migration and the rights of migrants.

The clinic partnered with the Farmworker Association of Florida, Inc. in a United Nations report! The clinic partnered with the Farmworker Association of Florida, Inc. to provide legal representation to Afghan refugees. Fourteen students were selected to travel to Apopka, Florida, to work alongside the Farmworker Association of Florida, Inc. (FWAF) and directly with migrant workers to learn about the environmental, legal, and cultural issues that they face.

Local elder law attorney Annalise Kapusta joined the Aging & the Law class to discuss guardianship for minors. The child, a ward of the state, lived at the children's facility. The child, a ward of the state, lived at the children's facility. The child, a ward of the state, lived at the children's facility. The child, a ward of the state, lived at the children's facility. The child, a ward of the state, lived at the children's facility.

Professor Paolo Annino and Professor Daynica Harley, helped a little boy leave a nursing home, playing with the other children. With a legal services office, the Children's Advocacy Clinic advocated for the child to be made crib enwrapped in a thick plastic bubble. The child would rip his plastic bubble to escape. Made crib enwrapped in a thick plastic bubble.

A statewide racial justice initiative adds to our established focus on racial justice, collaboration, and innovation. Exciting new programs are already fully booked. At the FSU Law Public Interest Law Center, we are all about expansion, your preferences | Opt out | Subscribe.

Happy holidays!